BE IT ENACTED BY THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF WASHINGTON:

INTENT

NEW SECTION, Sec. 1. Washington voters have voted 10 times against taxes based on an individual's personal income. This initiative gives voters the opportunity to reaffirm their strong opposition to taxes based on an individual's personal income. Opponents may say this initiative forever stops taxes based on an individual's personal income by state government. It's not true — this initiative institutes laws to stop such taxes but it cannot and does not stand in the way of the legislature proposing a constitutional amendment that authorizes such taxes with voter approval. Opponents may say this initiative forever stops taxes based on an individual's personal income by counties, cities, and port districts. It's not true — this initiative institutes laws to stop such taxes but it cannot and does not stand in the way of the legislature proposing a constitutional amendment that authorizes such taxes with voter approval. Opponents may say this initiative eliminates the taxes based on an individual's personal income imposed by the 2021 Legislature. It is true that this initiative repeals those taxes because they were based on an individual's personal income. This initiative is all about instituting laws to stop taxes based on an individual's personal income and section 3 of this initiative is consistent with that. But this initiative cannot and does not stand in the way of the legislature proposing a constitutional amendment that authorizes such taxes with voter approval. Opponents may say this initiative eliminates the taxes based on an individual's personal income imposed by cities, including the city of Seattle. It is true that this initiative nullifies city taxes based on an individual's personal income and chapter 5.38 of the Seattle Municipal Code imposes taxes based on an individual's personal income. This initiative is all about instituting laws to stop taxes based on an individual's personal income and the sections of this initiative that stop city taxes based on an individual's personal income are consistent with that. But this initiative cannot and does not stand in the way of the legislature proposing a constitutional amendment that authorizes such taxes with voter approval. Opponents may say this initiative eliminates business and occupation taxes. That's not true. Business and occupation taxes are based on gross receipts, not on an individual's personal income, so are not affected by this initiative (see section 13). Opponents may say that this initiative eliminates premiums for Family and Medical Leave premiums, Long-Term Care premiums, and Industrial Insurance premiums. That's not true. None of those are taxes based on an individual's personal income and this initiative does not amend any of the relevant statutes and therefore does not affect those (see sections 14, 15, and 16). Whether called income taxes, payroll taxes, or excise taxes, if they are taxes based on an individual's personal income, the great majority of voters want to institute laws stopping them. But this initiative cannot and does not stand in the way of the legislature proposing a constitutional amendment that authorizes such taxes with voter approval.
